CAUTION: NEVER OPERATE IN THE BATHTUB OR SHOWER.

THE SCIENCE BEHIND LED LIGHT THERAPY

NASA studies have proven that LED light boosts cell energy and accelerates healing. Light therapy is now used in leading hospitals and spas around the world for health and beauty treatments.

For information on NASA's scientific studies, please refer to the following at www.nasa.org:

NASA Space Technology Shines Light on Healing.
NASA News, December 18, 2000.

Doctors at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee discovered that light-emitting diodes, or LEDs, originally designed for commercial plant growth research in space, boost energy to cells and accelerate healing. In the laboratory, scientists found that skin and muscle cells grown in cultures and exposed to LED infrared light grew 150 to 200 percent faster than ground cultures not stimulated by the light.

Light Emitting Diodes Bring Relief to Young Cancer Patients; NASA Technology Used For Plant Growth Now in Clinical Trials. NASA News, November 13, 2003

LED light therapy is continuing to show promise as a treatment to aid healing of bone marrow transplant patients. In the first stage of the study, use of LEDs resulted in significant relief to pediatric bone marrow transplant patients suffering the ravages of oral mucositis, a common side effect of chemotherapy and radiation treatments.
